A Trip Around the World of Sauvignon Blanc

While Chardonnay may be the world's most popular white wine, Sauvignon Blanc has its own allure, even though it is often dismissed or relegated to the ranks of ho-hum swillable white for the indiscriminate drinker. Be assured: That is not the case. Sauvignon Blanc possesses flavors of citrus, minerals, grassiness, herbs and green apple, to name a few. Its bracing acidity gives a crisp, clean mouth feel that makes it a wonderful aperitif and an excellent complement to lighter fare. Its aroma and taste are often described using vegetative terms — cut grass, asparagus or nettle. While many countries make Sauvignon Blanc, France, New Zealand and California are the biggest producers.

France

Sauvignon Blanc was originally a French varietal, grown in both the Loire Valley and Bordeaux, where it is often blended with Semillon. French Sauvignon Blanc is much less fruity than that made in New Zealand or California. Bordeaux's most esteemed Sauvignon Blanc comes from Graves. From here, the wines are dry and frequently described as flinty or minerally, with subtle herbs and fruit. The wine gained popularity

The soil around Touraine is very flinty and was the prime source of gun-flints for Napoleon's armies. The minerality imparted by this flint is one of the key elements that makes Sauvignon Blanc so refreshing and so...French.

in Sancerre and Pouilly Fumé in the 1960s. In these two regions, it has an alluring herbal character with aromas of mineral and melon.

New Zealand

New Zealand Sauv Blanc from the Marlborough region is a force to be reckoned with. The cooler climate results in wines with distinct citrusy, grapefruit characteristics. Sauvignon Blanc accounts for more than fifty percent of the wine production in New Zealand. A generalized division of New Zealand Sauvignon Blanc is based on the varying climates of the northern and southern regions. In the north, it tends toward a riper and richer style with melon and stone fruit flavors. Southern styles are typically lighter and crisper with gooseberry and herbs, a little more French in style. More time on the vine in the cooler South promotes more vibrant fruit flavors with greater acidity.

California

In California's varying climates, Sauvignon Blanc adheres less to one particular style, like the leaner, stony French or the herbaceous, fruity New Zealand wines. California's range of growing conditions and temperatures, produces Sauvignon Blanc in a variety of styles. From grassy to fruity to spicy, or even the less frequently used oak-influenced style. (Sauv Blanc is most often made in stainless steel barrels.)

In California, Sauvignon Blanc was looked down upon until Robert Mondavi in the late 1960s decided to make a Pouilly Fumé style wine because of one such wine he'd enjoyed. He named it Fumé Blanc to differentiate it from the sullied reputation of an overly sweet or personality-devoid wine for which it was pigeon-holed with good reason in the U.S.. Fumé Blanc elevated the wine to one worthy of attention and respect, and encouraged other producers to strive for this kind of quality that separated it from its former reputation as a wine lacking integrity.

Bottom line: Don't dismiss Sauvignon Blanc as bland or harsh or, gasp!, uninteresting. Like any grape, it is worth some investigation; and your own enjoyment is worth allowing yourself to be surprised. ♦

Wine News, Events or Musings

Michael & David Wine Dinner

Last month, Sheila McNeil attended the Lake Ridge Restaurant wine dinner as the guest of Michael Phillips of Michael & David Wines, from Lodi, California.

'Michael and David' are Michael and David Phillips, brothers whose family has been cultivating wine grapes for nearly a century. Michael and David constitute the fifth generation of Phillips family grape-growers, with Michael's son, Kevin, the winery's VP of Operations, continuing the tradition into the sixth generation.

Many of you are familiar with Michael & David wines, and it comes as no surprise that the wines — and the dinner — were incredible. From Incognito Viognier and 7 Heavenly Chards to Petite Petit, 7 Deadly Zins and Earthquake Cabernet Sauvignon, it was truly an elegant and memorable evening.

Food & Wine

Sauvignon Blanc-Steamed Mussels with Garlic Toasts (Recipe from Food & Wine Magazine)

4 thick slices white peasant bread

1/4 cup extra virgin olive oil, plus more for brushing

2 garlic cloves, 1 left whole, 1 thinly sliced

1 medium shallot, minced

salt and freshly ground pepper

4 lbs mussels scrubbed

1 1/2 cups Sauvignon Blanc

4 Tbsp unsalted butter, room temperature

1/4 cup coarsely chopped flat-leaf parsley

1. Preheat broiler, brush bread with olive oil, put on baking sheet and broil 1 minute on each side until golden. Lightly rub whole garlic over the toasts.

2. Heat olive oil in large, deep pot. Add shallot and sliced garlic, seasonlightly with salt and pepper; cook over high heat, stirring, until garlic is softened and lightly browned, about three minutes. Add mussels and stir for one minute. Add wine, cover and steam mussels until they open, about five minutes. Remove from heat. Using a slotted spoon, transfer mussels to four deep bowls, discarding any that do not open.

3. Add butter and parsley to broth, swirling and shaking the pot until the butter melts. Slowly pour the broth over the mussels, leaving grit in bottom of pot. Serve mussels with the garlic toasts.

Serves 4. Wine pairing: Your favorite Sauvignon Blanc.
